Pizarro Conquers Peru

The Inca empire was discovered by Spaniards in 1530 after 8 yrs of exploration, & its conquest was organized by a syndicate at whose head was an obscure adventurer, Francisco Pizarro. Pizarro arrived on the Peruvian coast in 1532 with forces smaller even than those of Cortes, but by befriending the usurper on the Inca throne, ATAHUALPA, he was able to capture & execute him. The Capital, CUZCO, fell to Pizarro in 1533, and the high degree of organization in the Inca Empire (Therore economy & network of roads) made conquest simple. Pizarro was a brutal man, but the severity of Inca rule, cost him in the role of deliverer. He was appointed governor of Peru by Spain but a series of civil wars among the emperors (in which Pizarro died in 1541) raged for 30 yrs. Local native rulers sought to gain advantage from these quarrels, but only in Chile were they able to resist Spanish arms. By 1550 most of Central America, the Caribbean and west coast of South America were part of Spain's New World Empire.

FIGHTS FOR POWER

Posing as liberators, the Spaniards
Crowned HUASCAR's brother MANCO INCA as the Empire's new ruler.
But real power rested with FRANCISCO PIZARRO, an illiterate foot soldier and brilliant military leader the Spanish king had named governor of Peru. Pizarro moved the Capital to Lima, a new city he founded on the coast, and built lowland towns for Spanish settlers. He watched at a distance as fellow conquistador Diego de ALMAGRO, who was unhappy with the desert lands deeded to him, fought Pizarro's brother HERNANDO for CUSCO. Hernando killed Almagro in 1538. Three years later 20 of Almagro's followers murdered

Governor Pizarro.
